Each district court within the Ninth Circuit uses a competitive open-selection merit process in making appointments for the office of a magistrate judge. It is often a highly complicated and time-consuming procedure. Applicants should expect the entire process to require four to twelve months. A merit selection panel composed of a chair and at least six other members evaluates all applications and conducts interviews of those applicants the panel deems to be most qualified. The panel prepares a report of its recruitment and recommends for final consideration by the district court the names of five or fewer candidates the panel evaluates to be most qualified. The final selection is made by majority vote of the active judges of the district court. In cases of failure by the judges of the district court to make a majority selection, the chief judge shall make the determination.

Following the selection, a thorough background check is undertaken by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and a report is submitted by the Internal Revenue Service. Final appointment is contingent upon satisfactory reports by these agencies.

Applicants may be required to have a physical examination at the applicant's expense.
